The younger Gildersleeve is at his home, 28 West Forty-eighth street, with a badly bruised body and a broken left hand. He was unable to appear in irt to-day, and Justice Taintor held the three prisoners for examination on Friday morning, at 10 o'clock. They

Friday morning, at 10 o'clock. They were admitted to ball in $500 each, Alderman Saul going on their bond.

According to the story told in court Alger Gildersleeve and several engineers were on a float in the Harlem River taking soundings near One Hundred and Eighty-fifth street. At about 5 o'clock last evening a number of great boulders came dashing down a declivity about 50 feet high. One or two or these rocks came dashing down a declivity about 50 feet high. One or two or these rocks came very near striking the party. Had they done so, lives would undoubtedly have been lost.

Mr. Gildersleeve went ashore with Engineer Hillman and climbed to the top of the hill. There they found Contractor Flanagan and his men at work rolling the rocks down the hill to clear a space at that point.

the rocks down the hill to clear a space at that point.

Gildersleeve ordered them to stop, saying that they were endangering lives. Flanagan refused, and hot words ensued, which ended in Flanagan striking Gildersleeve in the eye. A roughand-tumble fight followed in which one of the Italians seized a stantling ten feet long and two inches square, and struck Gildersleeve over the left hand, breaking it.

A policeman, whose name no one seems to know, came up, and Gildersleeve ordered him to arrest Flanagan and the two laborers. This he refused to do, and Gildersleeve threatened to report him at the One Hundred and Fifty-second street station-house.

Judge Gildersleeve was quite severe in his criticism of the conduct of Sergt. Woodward, claiming that it was unnecessary to lock his son up, and he was equally severe in his denunciation of Flanagan, who, he says, must have known his son.

Flanagan, who lives at One Hundred and Fifty-second street and Eighth avenue, is something of a politician in the Twenty-eighth Assembly District. He insists that Mr. Gildersleeve struck the first blow.

ty - seventh street station, saw a man cutting open a valise in a hallway early this morning, and be arrented him. Atherson remembered that Mrs. Mary Legrow, of 257 West Thirty-ninth street, had reported a burglary earlier in the night, and he took the man on suspicion.

The valise which the man was in the act of cutting was Mrs. Legrow's. It was full of her private papers, and in the prisoner's pocket was found a steamer clock, which had been stolen at the same time. The prisoner gave the name of Joseph Williams, but refused to say where he lived. He is a good-looking mulatto boy of nineteen.

Mrs. Legrow was awakened and she went to the station. She identified the articles in Williams's possession as hers, and identified a blue necktie he was wearing as one taken a week ago, when her flat was burgisrised. At that time a gold watch and chain, as well as the necktie were taken.

Williams also had a bunch of 100 keys in his pocket and other burgisr's tools. He was taken to Jefferson Market Court, where he was held for examination.

A few minutes later Mrs. Friedman who is still very weak and confined to her bed, heard the neighbors screaming for her from the ground floor. Thinking that something had happened to one of her children, she got up and struggled down to the cellar.

There in one corner she saw the mangled and dead body of her boy. In a dazed sort of a manner she picked up the bleeding corpse and carried it upstairs. A doctor was summoned, but death had been instantaneous.

The roof upon which the boy was at play is surrounded by a fence, excepting on one side, where there is an air shaft. This is about two feet wide, and is surrounded by a narrow stone coping.

It is believed that Nathan had climbed up on this, and was walking along on twenty of the same mand and was dashed to the cellar below, a distance of about 80 feet. The boy's head was frightfully crushed.
